

Kingston City Hall

KINGSTON, NY

A fine example of Victorian architecture, Kingston City Hall is safeguarded by the National Park Service. Completed in 1872 in a late Victorian architectural style, the Kingston City Hall served as the town's municipal office exactly 100 years, until 1972, when the city offices moved to a new city hall. After being left vacant for twenty years, an extensive restoration and renovation effort was mounted with the aid of federal, state and private funds. Maintaining the character of the historic building, while updating its condition, underscored the premise of the restoration. EverGreene was called upon to assist with the restoration of the historic details including restoring or replicating artwork, moldings, faux finishes, and ceiling designs. Currently the building is once again reoccupied by the city government.
