

Tang Dynasty Ceramic Camel

WASHINGTON, DC

The Tang dynasty (A. D. 618-907), with its capital at Chang'an, is regarded by historians as a high point in Chinese civilization—equal, or even superior, to the Han period. The Tang period was the golden age of literature and art.

In 2013, we were contracted by a private collector to restore and preserve a ceramic camel dating to the 7th century AD.

The tail of this unglazed, grey ceramic camel had detached along an old break. It was reattached using a methacrylate adhesive and small areas of loss were filled with a pigmented mix of methacrylate adhesive and glass microballoons. The fill was in-painted to match the surrounding material.

MORE INFORMATION:

<https://evergreene.com/projects/tang-dynasty-ceramic-camel-conservation/>

SERVICES PERFORMED

Conservation Treatments

