The Frick Collection, New York, NY

The Frick Collection, located at 1 East 70th St in New York City, is a premier museum and research center. The building was originally designed in 1914 by Thomas Hastings of the New York Beaux Arts Architecture firm Carrère and Hastings as the residence of Henry Clay Frick, an American industrialist and patron of the arts. Upon his death, Frick donated his extensive collection to create a public art museum. The building was designated a New York City Landmark in 1973, and a National Historic Landmark in 2008.

During The Frick Collection's renovation and enhancement project, Sciam Construction replaced the skylight above the West Gallery, the largest gallery in the Collection, renowned for its display of Old Master paintings. EverGreene's expertise was specifically engaged for the stabilization, conservation, and restoration of the ornate coffered ceiling and laylight framing in the West Gallery.
